PANEL DISCUSSION ON UNION BUDGET 2015-16

UNVEILING POSSIBILITIES FOR MAKE IN INDIA

MARCH 3, 2015
The matter of analysis is how the finance minister (FM) will balance his books; will he stick to the fiscal deficit target of 3.6 percent of GDP and continue to pursue the path of fiscal consolidation? Will the FM unleash any sops to lift the manufacturing sector?

Will SEZs and industrial corridors and smart cities get any tax relief? And how shall the budget respond to - end tax terrorism, ramp up public spending as it is estimated that India needs $800 billion to clock 7 percent growth a year and improve the ease of doing business - which sectors shall get single-window clearances and which shall be allowed for automatic FDI.

Make In India being the centerpiece of Modi's economic strategy, it is rather important to view the budget in context of measures to change the investor sentiment, especially among the businessmen from the US? Will India be able to ride this running horse of an economic development, aggressively than aiming at moderate growth?

The present government not saddled by political compulsions of coalition governments and has come to power on the plank of 'development for all'. The budget is a significant pointer to the direction the government wants to take and hence an in depth analysis of the budget shall give us the road map where the economy is headed towards.

The new Indian government is expected to unveil more reforms in the coming days, in the forthcoming Budget to woo foreign investment and make India a manufacturing destination. The budget is billed as "make or break" event for Prime Minister Narendra Modi's government.
